Henry Page Law Office
Princess Anne private

c. 1877

This single-story gable-front frame structure was originally the law office of Henry Page, son of John W. Crisfield and a prominent Princess Anne attorney during the second half of the nineteenth century. Henry Page acquired this small piece of the "Somerset Hotel Property" in March of 1877, and he presumably directed the construction of the office by the end the year. The structure is identified on the Princess Anne town map published in the same year. Now covered with asbestos shingles, the rectangular frame structure was intially sheathed with weatherboards. The decorative brackets which still remain add a decorative period finish to an otherwise plain office building.

Its gable facade is very plain, having brackets with drops beneath its overhanging gable eave as its only ornamentation. A large picture window and one door complete the facade. To the rear of the structure is another structure, nearly the same size, and connected to the former by a small hyphen.
